2019 Budget

Council Considers Six Percent Increase in Public Safety Budget

by James Giese

In a marathon session lasting almost four hours, Greenbelt City Council reviewed City Manager Nicole Ard's budget for the Fiscal Year 2019 Public Safety section. Present to discuss their budget proposals were representatives of the police department, Greenbelt Volunteer Fire Department and Rescue Squad, Greenbelt Community Emergency Response Team (CERT) and Community Emergency/Animal Response Team (CART). (See separate stories for the fire department and CERT/CART).

Funding the Greenbelt Police

Department utilizes 99 percent of the public safety budget. The proposed expenditure increase budgeted for public safety is nearly six percent more than for the current year budget and 10 percent more than the current year's estimated expenditures. This compares to a five percent increase for the total city proposed budget, both for current year budget and estimated expenses. The new budget does not change the number of public safety personnel authorized nor any job classes. Nor does the proposal increase the property tax rate. The budget increases being supported are primarily from anticipated increased property tax revenue due to increased property assessments and new construction near the Greenbelt Metro station.

For the second year, council held the worksession at the Springhill Lake Recreation Center.

The meeting was videotaped for playback on the city cable channel and website.

Police

Presenting the Police budget to council were Acting Chief Thomas Kemp and Captain Gordon Pracht. Providing backup from the audience was Sergeant Tim White, the department's budget number cruncher, and City Treasurer Jeff Williams, the city's official number cruncher. Kemp has been acting chief for more than a year with a national

City Council Looks at Service Groups and Museum Funding

by Diane Oberg

The April 4 city council worksession focused on support that the city gives to various organizations providing services to Greenbelters as well as the budget for the Greenbelt Museum. There are two main classes of organizations receiving assistance: regional services such as Meals on Wheels or Washington Ear, and city contribution and recognition groups such as the Boys and Girls Clubs or Senior Softball. The funding for contribution and recognition groups will be discussed on May 9 at 7 p.m. in the Community Center.

This first budget worksession of the year outside the center of the city was held in the Springhill Lake Recreation Center. Beyond city staff and representatives of the organizations seeking funding and this reporter, just one citizen, council regular Bill Orleans, attended.

In her proposed budget City

Manager Nicole Ard penciled in the same funding as the last few years for the service organizations. Greenbelt Inter-generational Volunteer Exchange Service (GIVES) would receive $1,000, Meals on Wheels – $2,000, Washington Ear – $1,000 and Miscellaneous – $2,500.

Washington Ear was unable to attend the meeting but councilmembers noted its longstanding service to the community, including reading the News Review to sight-impaired residents, and appeared willing to adopt Ard's funding level.

Lisa Ealley, representing Meals on Wheels (MOW), said that participants are charged just $5 per day for three meals on weekdays. Some people cannot even afford that price, she reported. Ealley estimated that they now have "probably 100" volunteers but not all volunteers work every day.

Councilmember Judith Davis requested that increasing the contribution to Meals on Wheels by $1,000 be placed on the list of possible budget changes. Items placed on this list will be reviewed at the final budget worksession on May 21.

There was no discussion of the contribution to GIVES or Washington Ear. Davis noted that the city's GIVES contribution is used by the organization to pay for their insurance.

Museum

The Greenbelt Museum is housed in a Greenbelt Homes, Inc. (GHI) duplex on Crescent Road across from the library and is run cooperatively by the city and the Friends of the Greenbelt Museum (FOGM). Director Megan Searing Young is a full-time city employee. Two part-time staffers are paid by FOGM.

Greenbelt Senior Meal Options Are Affordable and Convenient

by Caroline Hanks

As noon comes around and more attendees arrive for the Senior Nutrition Program lunch at the Community Center on Wednesday, April 11, Greenbelt resident Linda Martin remarks, "They've been coming a long time, too." There is a sense of community among the regulars at these lunches, which take place Monday through Friday at the Community Center. Seniors set their belongings on a table and walk to the lunch counter to pick up a tray of the day's lunch. A box of condiments sits on one of the tables for diners to add their own flavors to the meals. One attendee sets a portable radio on the windowsill, adding quiet music in the background of ongoing table conversations.

Socialization is the big key of the program, according to Rebekah Sutfin, the therapeutic recreation supervisor for Greenbelt Department of Recreation and Parks. It's held in the only room

Many Volunteers Clean Up Forest Preserve and New Trail

by Maryam El-Amin

Through the chilly weather of March, generous volunteers were giving back to their community in Greenbelt. On Saturday, March 17, a litter cleanup event was held at the Sunrise Tract of the Greenbelt Forest Preserve, adjacent to the Greenbelt Dog Park. Organized and sponsored by the City of Greenbelt Department of Public Works and the Greenbelt Forest Preserve Advisory Board, 21 volunteers, including members of the Forest Preserve Advisory Board, removed 600 pounds of trash. Items removed included tires, scrap metal, glass bottles and aluminum cans.

That wasn't the only volunteer cleanup held in March. On Saturday, March 24, a litter pickup was held at the new trail off Cherrywood Lane, across the street from the Shell gas station. Six volunteers helped remove 144 pounds of litter in just two hours.

Litter cleanups are important in reducing environmental pollution; not only is litter unsightly, but it threatens the health of the

Letters to the Editor

New Deal Café Needs To Open Up Menu

I read the April 12 article about changes to the New Deal Café with great interest. I was disappointed to learn that this community landmark was losing money and deeply in debt. Disappointed, but not surprised.

As a customer, I want the same thing as the New Deal’s directors – a vibrant, successful community gathering spot with great food and entertainment. Like many others in Greenbelt, I am frequently looking for a convenient place to go out for dinner and, at only a stone’s throw from home, the New Deal Café should be a great option.

The reason I don’t go back to the New Deal, however, is the menu. While there are a few options that will always be reliable (the cheeseburger for one), most of the menu is off-putting to all but a select crowd. And while this crowd is loyal, they are not paying the bills nor are they bringing in new customers.

I fear that a decision to turn the restaurant over to vegan specialists is a big step in the wrong direction. The menu needs to open up, not become more restricted through vegan/vegetarian options. If the New Deal wants a renaissance, it needs to either become the best specialty vegan restaurant in the state or simply produce a larger range of more exciting options.

Support for Maglev

I am writing in support of the proposed new SCMaglev between Baltimore and Washington that is planned to be built through Greenbelt.

I attended the Greenbelt City Council’s public hearing about the maglev on April 3. I assumed that a public hearing was for the council to hear all sides of the matter. But, since most of the council members wore a pin opposing the maglev, it created a hostile environment for those of us who are for the maglev trains or who were undecided and wanted more information. But I spoke in support of the maglev during the meeting, anyway.

I also found it amusing/ironic that some participants stated they did not think the train was needed, but Mayor Emmett Jordan was late to the meeting because he was stuck in traffic!

During the meeting, a resident stated that she had been investigating insurance policies and one of them asked whether there was a tunnel under her house. The implication was that the company would not insure the house if a tunnel was under it. I question that, because there are hundreds, possibly thousands, of miles of tunnels for roads, trains, pedestrians, etc. throughout this country and many of them have houses and businesses on the surface above them. How are those houses and businesses insured?

I have sent a full page of questions to the city to forward to BWRR. I am an engineer at heart and want to know the facts about how the train will operate. So, I am looking forward to the responses from BWRR as posted on the City of Greenbelt website.

I am grateful the recent District 4 newsletter from County Councilmember Todd Turner includes an item titled Baltimore-Washington Maglev Update. It was an unbiased update on the project and encouraged constituents “to contact federal, state and project officials to express your position.” The article included the URL of the website for the project www.bwmaglev.info.

I also encourage everyone to visit the official site for the project to make sure they are responding to facts instead of innuendo and fear. The official sites associated with the SCMaglev project are the one above and <https://northeastmaglev.com/>. Click on Facts to get short answers to frequently asked questions.

Also, the article titled Traffic Relief Plan Focuses on I-495 and I-270 Corridors on page 13 of the April 12 issue of the Greenbelt News Review caught my attention. For those of us who want to make sure our human transportation has minimal impact on the environment, this traffic plan is a disaster. It makes the environmental impact of the maglev look good!

Being Alive

Itzhak, an unrated 80-minute documentary about the life and career of virtuoso violinist Itzhak Perlman, is directed by Alison Chernick. It joins Wes Anderson’s Isle of Dogs at Old Greenbelt Theatre on Friday, April 20.

Stricken by polio at age 4, Perlman nevertheless dazzled as a child prodigy and appeared on the Ed Sullivan Show at age 13. Archival clips and conversations with master musicians, family and friends like Alan Alda and former President Obama, reveal a gregarious, irreverent, self-deprecatory man with a popular touch. He once backed up Billy Joel in Madison Square Garden.

By far his dearest intimate is his wife of over 50 years, Toby, Perlman’s biggest fan and a challenging critic. She says, “When I hear that sound, when I hear that playing, it’s like breathing. It’s like being alive.”

CROP Hunger Walk On Sunday, May 6

Attention, Greenbelters who like walking and helping others. There will be a hunger-inspired walk around Lake Artemesia in Berwyn Heights on Sunday afternoon, May 6. Church World Service (CWS), an ecumenical relief agency helping refugees and low-income families since World War II, sponsors the walk. CWS CROP Walks (Communities Responding to Overcome Poverty) happen in 1,000 U.S. communities each year.

Last year the Hyattsville Area CROP Hunger Walk raised over $46,000 through its walkers and their sponsors. A quarter of the proceeds went to Help by Phone of Prince George's County for food distributed in its seven church emergency food pantries. Funds from CROP Walks are used for food and community development projects in the U.S. and overseas.

Over the years, Greenbelt groups (Greenbelt Community Church, Greenbelt Baptist, Berwyn Presbyterian, Mishkan Torah, Lastner Lane GB contingent, Holy Cross Lutheran and the Roosevelt Democratic Club) have participated in the Hyattsville Area CROP Hunger Walk. The walk begins around 1 p.m. on May 6. Park free at the Linson/Wells Swim and Skating complex at 5211 Campus Dr. (off Kenilworth Ave.). Stop at the table to register and donate. Do the full walk (around 3 miles) or the short walk (a little under 1.5 miles). Water and restrooms are available. For more information, check the website crophungerwalk.com.

In addition to these topics, Washington will provide a comprehensive update on the recently completed 2018 Maryland legislative session. Attendees can also discuss any other issues important to them and the community, including the maglev train, updates on the public school system and the upcoming 2018 elections.

Free Film on Anxiety Features Phelps

City of Greenbelt students and parents are invited to a free screening of the movie Angst on Saturday, April 21 at 11 a.m. at the Old Greenbelt Theatre.

Featuring Olympian Michael Phelps, this film aims to raise awareness about anxiety in children and teens. This topic is timely since students will begin PARCC testing (an anxiety-inducing event) the following week and because schools have seen an increase in bullying over the past few years.

Following the movie, a brief discussion will be led by Gretchen Schock, owner of Bee Yoga Fusion, and Donna Behe, PGCPs guidance counselor, where students can ask questions and gain access to additional resources. Whether suffering from anxiety or would just like to learn more, everyone is welcome to attend. The Old Greenbelt Theatre will also offer a small popcorn at a discounted price. Run time is 55 minutes; appropriate for ages 10 and up.

Special thanks to Bee Yoga Fusion, City of Greenbelt ACE, Eleanor Roosevelt High School PTSA, Greenbelt Elementary School PTA and Greenbelt Middle School PTA for supporting the film screening.

Synagogue Annual Vintage Jewelry Sale

The vintage and costume jewelry sale of Mishkan Torah is scheduled for Sunday, April 29 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. This will be a good time to find personal treasures or Mother's Day gifts. Children can find something for Mom, and crafters can find objects to modify into something unique. As in the past, prices will begin at less than a dollar, so there will be something there for everybody's budget. There will be a minor jewelry repair station and a selection of recent handcrafted jewelry made by local crafters. Mishkan Torah Synagogue is located at 10 Ridge Road at the corner with Westway.

Astronomical Society Speaker on Asteroids

The public is invited to the April meeting of the Astronomical Society of Greenbelt. The featured speaker will be Dr. Christine Hartzell, who will discuss granular mechanics on asteroids. The behavior of granular materials, such as electrostatic dust, drives the interior structure of small rubble pile asteroids and understanding their dynamics can improve understanding of the evolution of asteroids.

The meeting will be held Thursday, April 26 at 7:30 p.m. at the H.B. Owens Science Center, 9601 Greenbelt Rd., Lanham (adjacent to DuVal High School). All are welcome. There is no admission fee.

Hartzell is an assistant professor in the Department of Aerospace Engineering at the University of Maryland. She joined the university after a postdoctoral fellowship with the Keck Institute for Space Studies at the California Institute of Technology. She is one of 13 participating scientists selected by NASA for the agency's first asteroid sample return mission, OSIRIS-REx.

search only recently begun to select a replacement for retired chief James Craze.

Besides filling that vacancy, the department has been plagued with vacancies in other officer positions due to retirements and employees leaving for other departments. Although still short 12 of the authorized 53 police officers, Kemp told council the department was now past the retirement problems of last year (although eight others could retire this year), and was heading upwards on personnel. With increased numbers, he felt the department would be more proactive and more able to deal with crime issues. Newly promoted command officers are gaining the job experience needed to fully take charge of their responsibilities, Kemp said.

Mayor Emmett Jordan asked if the department had lowered its standards to fill vacancies. Kemp replied, “Not one bit.” If they had, the department could have a full complement by now.

Pracht provided statistics on a recent hiring process for new officers. There were 251 applications, 59 of whom also responded to an invitation to take the exam. Of the 37 who showed up to take the exam, 16 passed the written test, 14 took the physical examination and seven left after the exams and background checks. The cost to hire a police officer, including benefits and outfitting of equipment (excluding the cost of a vehicle) is $84,000, he said.

Communications

Of the nine communications specialist (dispatcher) positions authorized, four are vacant, Kemp said. Three of the personnel were hired by Anne Arundel County. He said it was a difficult job, now even more complicated with the advent of computer assistance dispatching (CAD). Some new hires didn’t work out.

In spite of these issues, Kemp noted that police communications had a 90 percent approval rating from those requiring service.

Crime

Of great concern to council was the upward trend in the number of crimes committed. Jordan called it a disturbing trend, also noting that the problem was area wide. Kemp noted that the total number was less than five years ago. Total Class I crimes (the more serious offenses) for 2017 totaled 920 as compared to 772 for 2016. Crimes against persons (murder, rape, robberies and assaults) increased in 2017 from 111 to 145. Property crimes (burglaries, thefts and auto thefts) went from 661 to 775.

Franklin Park continued to be the highest identified crime sector, accounting for nearly half of crimes against persons. Kemp noted this was the most transient area of the city. Greenbelt East residential accounted for 18 percent of crimes in this category, while Greenbelt Center had 16 percent. Greenbelt East commercial and Beltway Plaza combined accounted for 15 percent.

Franklin Park accounted for 26 percent of property crimes; Beltway Plaza, 23 percent; Greenbelt East residential, 19 percent; Greenbelt Center, 15 percent; and Greenbelt East commercial, 13 percent. A small number, nearly all property crimes (as opposed to crimes against persons), came from the new development at Greenbelt Station (23), while only two property crimes were reported to Greenbelt police at the Metro Station.

In 2017, there were four homicides as compared to one for the previous year; nine reported rapes vs. five in 2016, 78 robberies vs. 54 in 2016; 54 assaults vs. 51 in 2016; 98 breaking and entering/burglaries vs. 88 in 2016 and 610 thefts vs. 500 in 2016. On the positive side, auto thefts dropped to 67 as compared to 71 in the previous year, continuing the significant downward trend resulting from better theft protection in newer vehicles.

Kemp reported that although crime clearance rates dropped by four percent in 2017, the clearance rates for crimes against persons had increased by one percent. That was contrary to a statewide trend. Two of the homicides were closed by arrests as well as one that occurred in 2003 by the capture of the wanted suspect in New York City.

Commentary

Jordan thought that the crime issue was complicated and that the breakdown in statistics didn’t tell the full story. For example, he thought that more people were living in Greenbelt West. Kemp said the department had identified 56 separate neighborhoods in Greenbelt and that the officers were aware of the distinctions in each of them.

Councilmember Silke Pope asked about outsiders committing crimes in the city and Kemp replied that he thought a majority were committed by outsiders.

Councilmember Colin Byrd said crime had reached a “crisis mode.” He thought there was a need for more robust new practices.

Kemp said the CAD was a significant new procedure and one that is only now beginning to make a difference. Currently, 10 officers are receiving CAD training, he said.

He also reported that all on-line officers had recently received LGBT and Bias Recognition training.

Councilmember Judith Davis said she did not feel the increase in crimes to be a crisis, but it was disturbing and that there were issues to be addressed. She thought the nationwide increase in drug usage was one factor in the crime problem. She also felt that a greater mistrust of police officers has developed, which makes it more difficult for officers to do their jobs and for job recruitment.

Byrd responded that he still thought crime to be in crisis mode. But he commended the department for the amazing way it had dealt with and solved a recent murder and its response to the recent bomb scare at the Municipal Building.

Kemp said he was happy with the department’s performance but would be happier when there are more officers. He noted that Greenbelt was one of only two county municipalities authorized by the State’s Attorney Office to conduct criminal investigations. The average response time here was 3.28 minutes, while it is 9.6 minutes for county police because of the larger area it covers.

School Security

Councilmember Rodney Roberts asked about the impact of a newly-enacted state law mandating that every school have a school resource officer. (Greenbelt was an early participant in this program, providing one for Eleanor Roosevelt High School; council had endorsed passage of this legislation.) Davis said that no one knows the source of the required funding. All high schools are supposed to be staffed next year and grade schools and elementary schools the following year. Kemp thought it might be the county that will have to provide officers.

Young described some of the actions FOGM took following the extensive water damage last year. They hired a professional conservator to work on damaged artwork. They also installed a new alarm system that would detect water leaks and cold temperatures. In the incident that caused the flood, the water leak was not detected until two days after it occurred.

Ard’s budget proposes increasing funding by 11 percent over the adopted budget for the current fiscal year (8.5 percent over estimated expenditures). The major increases sought are $5,000 for off-site storage. This is needed, Young said, to provide better storage for museum artifacts not currently on display. Currently such artifacts are stored in a room in the Community Center. Other factors behind the increase include the salary and benefits paid to Young.

In addition, in the miscellaneous budget item, $7,000 is allocated towards the establishment of a visitor and education center at 10-A Crescent Road. This line item is used for different projects in different years. Therefore, although the item is less than in the current year’s budget, it represents a new activity for the city.

As part of its efforts to raise funds to support the museum FOGM is looking to sell naming rights to the various museum rooms. The price to name a room (which will include a plaque identifying the donors or person or group that the donor is honoring with their contribution) will vary from room to room. The largest contribution to be sought through this program is $25,000.

As is the norm, no actual decisions were made in the budget worksessions (or in any worksession). While council will develop its budget (as opposed to the city manager’s budget) at the final budget worksession, nothing will be final until approved at a regular council meeting.

Filmmaker Documentary About the New Deal Café

by Matt Neufeld

Everyone knows that the New Deal Café at the Roosevelt Center is a special place with a special history and a special vibe as a home away from home for many people. Greenbelt filmmaker and artist Mike McMullin wants to capture that unique history, background and status in a documentary series about the acclaimed, much-loved music hall and restaurant.

On a chilly February 22, McMullin gathered a cast and crew at the New Deal to do just that: filming the first chapter of what he hopes to be a three-, four- or five-episode documentary series about the Café. Cast and crew started arriving about 8 a.m. and soon the performance space at the back of the establishment was filled with actors and crew, including four of the five music coordinators who have worked at the New Deal. McMullin, 60, a retired U.S. Army art director and graphics artist, and his crew interviewed the music coordinators who were seated at the bar, and filmed scenes of actors portraying Café patrons, all of whom were seated at tables. Former music coordinator Geff King played some tunes softly on stage, including a little ditty he came up with about the New Deal.

“There are two purposes for shooting the documentary about the Café,” McMullin said mid-morning during a break in the filming. Those are “to document the music of the Café and to promote the Café.”

“I love the Café,” McMullin said later, during another brief break from shooting, “and I love music. And I’ve never done a documentary before – I’ve always done dark comedies – and it’s a chance to do a [project] I haven’t written – it’s written by my brother,” Richard McMullin who was a past music coordinator at the Café.

Later that day Mike McMullin, director of photography Phoebe McFarb, and soundman Frank Kayser filmed several takes of a scene that included interviews with Amethyst Dwyer, Richard McMullin and Joseph Harris, who was the Café’s music coordinator from late 2006 to 2008. They discussed the Café’s history and its unique atmosphere, vibe, scene and aura. Future episodes will focus on the hundreds of groups that have performed at the Café since it was formally opened on December 30, 1995, at the Community Center. McMullin hopes to have the first episode available for viewing in May 2018.

Hilarious Hound from Hell Unleashed at the Arts Center

by Jim Link

The game is afoot at the Greenbelt Arts Center with the arrival of Ken Ludwig’s Baskerville: A Sherlock Holmes Mystery. A comic but suspenseful spoof of Arthur Conan Doyle’s The Hound of the Baskervilles, this fast-moving production is tight and action-packed, full of wit, richly clever, laced with puns (even groaners), slapstick, a fair share of screwball comedy and sight gags. Holmes’s challenge is to discover who is murdering the male heirs of Baskerville one by one. Is it the legendary, lethal hound of hell? And if so, who is controlling it? Is Sir Henry Baskerville, a gun-totin’ rube from Texas, the next to die?

Sandy Irving as Holmes is wonderful, archly superior, aristocratically dignified. He dazzles with his constant deductive brilliance, tossed off with total aplomb. It’s hilarious to hear him claim that he took this “most dangerous case only to relieve the tedium of our mortal existence.” Right. Bob Singer is excellent as Dr. John Watson, Holmes’s solid, reliable sidekick, a perfect straight man to be enormously impressed (like the audience) by the great man’s ratiocinative genius.

There are only three other cast members in this two-hour play (15-minute intermission) but what a trio! Bill Murray, Max Pugh and Bette Cassatt play at least a dozen characters, each with flair and energy, skill and perfect timing. They are in constant motion, rapidly flitting onstage and off, executing multiple costume changes, propelling the action forward and inciting laughter all the way.

Murray plays Dr. Mortimer, a hotel clerk, a sinister butterfly hunter and Scarpia from Puccini’s La Tosca to name just a few. Pugh plays Sir Henry Baskerville, a Scotland Yard detective and Verdi’s Falstaff among many others. Cassatt has some deliciously funny scenes. As Puccini’s La Tosca she hilariously stabs poor Scarpia/Murray at least 50 times – the cad simply refused to die. She is also the sour-faced German hausfrau Inge, modeled on Cloris Leachman’s portrait of Frau Blucher in Young Frankenstein. Cassatt changes accents (cockney, Irish, German), clothes and even genders without missing a beat. And she came on board only recently – late in rehearsals.

Veteran director Ann Lowe-Barrett modestly claims “to have been lucky enough to gather a superb cast and crew to present this wild ride through London streets and Devonshire moors.” She has teamed for the fourth time with award-winning producer William Powell, also an accomplished actor and insightful theater critic.

The production boasts a who’s who of familiar names: Bob Kleinberg, set designer, master carpenter, set construction; Penny Martin, set painting, sound design; Tommy Zanner, lighting design; Maria Bissex, costume, hair and wig design.

Lowe-Barrett made sure that I was aware that lighting technician Rebecca Gardner is only 13 years old and sound technician

2019 Budget

City Manager Ard Proposes Increase for Fire Department

by James Giese

City Manager Nicole Ard’s Fiscal Year 2019 budget proposes a contribution of $120,000 toward the Greenbelt Volunteer Fire Department and Rescue Squad, Inc.’s (GVFD&RS) equipment replacement, a 36 percent increase over the $88,000 contribution approved this year, the first budget increase since Fiscal Year 2009. These annual contributions are put in the city’s Replacement Fund to accumulate until there are enough monies to pay for a new piece of apparatus. Ard said the current Replacement Fund balance for the fire department is $434,000.

The Greenbelt City Council reviewed this budget at its April 11 worksession. Representing GVFD&RS at the meeting were President John Wynkoop and Assistant Chief Greg Gigliotti.

Scheduled for replacement is an ambulance that has been put out of service by the county. The cost for this is $283,881 with $153,000 coming from the city’s Replacement Fund, Ard said. Gigliotti said the purchase will be made based upon a Prince George’s County bid award for ambulances and will be in accordance with county specifications.

Although the city budget includes this annual contribution, GVFD&RS is not a city operation, but an independent volunteer company subject to regulation and support from the county fire service. The city owns the firehouse on Crescent Road which was built in the late 1950s and leases it to the department. The station is staffed by paid county firefighters, mostly during daytime, and is supplemented by volunteers. The county also provides funding for station management. Other expenses are covered by the annual fund drive, hall rentals and fundraisers, plus fees collected by the county from insurance companies for ambulance service, according to budget information provided by Gigliotti. Roof repairs are needed and the department’s budget includes $36,000 for that work.

Using its own funds, the GVFD&RS owns most of the equipment at the fire house, although in many other stations the trucks are bought and paid for by the county. The council many years ago agreed to contribute towards equipment purchases and the city budget includes an annual amount for this purpose.

Regularly, the fire service receives the top score from those who complete the city’s biennial rating of services at the time of city elections (4.42 out of 5 in 2017).

Emergency Calls

In response to fire calls, the county fire dispatchers send out units from three companies. Thus, Greenbelt responds to fire emergencies outside the city and units from neighboring departments respond to Greenbelt. In Greenbelt East and West, outside departments can arrive ahead of Greenbelt.

Ambulance service is also an important part of the operation and volunteers are trained as emergency response technicians (EMTs). The fees from insurance companies are split 50-50 if county firemen make an ambulance run using a GVFD&RS ambulance, but for runs made by volunteers, GVFD&RS receives the entire fee, according to Gigliotti.

Presently, there is one county and one GVFD&RS ambulance at the station, Gigliotti said. When the new ambulance is acquired, the county will remove its own, thereby significantly increasing the ambulance service fees GVFD&RS will get. Gigliotti also said that most ambulance runs by the department were outside the city.

Other Departments

For a number of years, the city has contributed $5,000 each to the West Lanham Hills and Berwyn Heights departments because they can be first-run responders in the city. Councilmember Judith Davis asked if West Lanham Hills was still serving the community. Wynkoop responded that the volunteers at the station seldom did respond and were out of service most of the time.

Davis then asked if the Branchville department responded to city calls. Wynkoop said county dispatchers now utilize GPS which pinpoints where each fire unit is and will dispatch those closest to the emergency. Davis suggested that perhaps the contribution for West Lanham Hills should go to Branchville. Wynkoop reluctantly agreed, saying he would rather the money went to Greenbelt.

Gigliotti noted that Greenbelt is a 24/7 department, while the other two are not. He also noted that Greenbelt is the hub, while Berwyn Heights and Branchville assist.

Councilmember Colin Byrd asked about the department’s involvement in the suspected bomb found at the Municipal Building recently. Gigliotti said the county has regulations for that and utilizes a special 24-hour on-duty SWAT team specially trained at Quantico and elsewhere.

Problems with getting a newly-installed HVAC system functioning properly caused Councilmember Silke Pope to question if the city had a role in dealing with the matter, since it owns the building. Councilmember Ed Putens asked about what the lease agreement with the city provides on building maintenance. Gigliotti said that was being researched but the department was working vigorously to get the problem corrected. Councilmembers suggested another worksession to deal with this issue.

CERT and CART Request Increase in 2019 Funds

by James Giese

Representatives of CERT/CART (Community Emergency/Animal Response Team) attended the April 11 Greenbelt City Council worksession on the Public Safety section of the Fiscal Year 2019 city budget to support the inclusion of $1,500 in the Police Department budget to support the organizations’ activities and to request an additional $1,000. All the money requested for this year would go to support CART. Of the amount budgeted, $1,000 would go toward the purchase of an American Kennel Club (AKC) trailer and the rest for T-shirts and supplies. The extra $1,000 would go to providing logos on both sides of the new trailer.

According to budget information provided to council, CERT has 23 members and participated as a team in seven city events and eight regional ones. The team was deployed by Prince George’s County to Suitland recently when a severe windstorm blew a wall off one apartment building and damaged the roofs of others, forcing the evacuation of the apartment complex. The team volunteered for three days assisting county police, the Red Cross and apartment management.

In Greenbelt, CERT participated in an Independence Day celebration by providing a first aid and cooling station and at the Labor Day Festival, where it had a public safety booth and participated in Information Day. The team also participated in National Night Out and the Greenbelt Pet Expo. Elsewhere, it participated in training exercises and conferences. Members also undertook specialized training courses related to emergency management. The team is planning to hold a full-scale search and rescue exercise later this year or in the next, working with other CERTs.

CART

CART has 19 members and participated in nine city events and six regional, according to the budget presentation materials it provided council. Included was a dog splash party at Mowatt Methodist Church and a Blessing of the Animals held jointly by Mowatt and Greenbelt Community Church. The group also participated in training exercises and plans to attend more upcoming events.

CART is seeking to purchase an AKC trailer costing $22,000. The AKC Reunite Fund will provide a $10,000 donation towards this purchase. Based on donations received and pending, CART is still short of the $12,000 it needs to raise by $3,340.

The trailer will come with logos of supporting businesses on one side, but to do both sides it needs to raise another $1,000. Council agreed to add this request to its budget wish list from which the council will make additions to the budget should any extra funds become available between now and budget adoption. Councilmember Rodney Roberts thought the cost for logos too high, while Councilmember Judith Davis advocated doing more fundraising so that supporting businesses got recognition on both sides.

My Perspective

Historical Society Library
Well-Liked and Well-Used

by Susan Pearl

Tom Simon, library volunteer, and Susan Pearl, historian, look at books at the Prince George’s County Historical Society Library.

Lots of interesting people come into our library, the Prince George’s County Historical Society Library, often with interesting and unexpected questions. A visitor on a Saturday this past fall, walked in with a new and different question: “Am I in Greenbelt?”

This man was from Boston, driving to Washington, D.C. When he saw the sign directing him to Greenbelt, he followed it – he said that he stopped here because he had driven through Greenbelt about 40 years ago, remembered a few interesting things about it and wanted another look. Our staff couldn’t resist, of course, and told him several things that he could look for in a short visit and sent him off with directions. He came back after about an hour, delighted with his visit to the Art Deco school (now Community Center) and the 1930s Roosevelt Center, where he had found afternoon sustenance. Before continuing on his journey, he sat down for a while to look through several publications on Greenbelt history, and we hope that he stops in again.

We had a call from the Sojourner Truth Room at the Oxon Hill Library, wanting to learn more about what we have in African American history in the county – communities, schools or churches. I invited them to visit, which they did later in the fall. Three librarians came and looked through our collections, taking careful notes on the items that they do not have, with plans to acquire them. They expressed an interest in partnering with us on some lectures, and they are especially anxious to sponsor a lecture by Omar Price after his dissertation on Freedmen’s Bureau Schools is complete (see “THEN & NOW, Vol. XLVI, No. 3, July-September 2017). I assured them that we would like to participate in this project.

On a gorgeous day at the end of October, I accompanied M-NCPPC naturalist Chris Garrett on his Champion Tree Tour. Three vans full of old-tree lovers visited county and state champion trees at Dr. Beanes’ cemetery, Kingston, His Lordship’s Kindness (Poplar Hill), Mount Calvert and several places in the Nottingham area. My job was to relate historical facts and stories about the places that we went. By far the most gorgeous were the immense Cucumber Magnolia at Kingston and the glorious American Magnolia at Nottingham.

I continue helping researchers from the Georgetown Memory Project, trying to trace the families of enslaved individuals who were sold by Georgetown University in 1838, especially those from Whitmarsh in Prince George’s County. We now have established a connection with several families who were the first to settle the town of North Brentwood in the 1890s.

We’ve been contacted by a member of the Hoban family from Ireland, doing research on James Hoban (architect of the White House) and looking for possible connections in Prince George’s County. I’ve sent the researcher information about Hoban’s work at Compton Bassett, and things are getting very interesting.

in the Center with round tables. The meal program is one of the affordable meal options available to seniors (ages 60 and above) in Greenbelt. Requiring only a reservation at least two days in advance and a requested meal donation of $3 for each lunch, seniors are guaranteed a hot meal. The other program, Meals on Wheels of College Park (MOW), provides three home-delivered meals Monday through Friday to seniors for $5 daily.

According to Sutfin, the meals provided through the Community Center’s lunch program are nutritional and diabetes-friendly. “It’s consistently a well-balanced meal,” Martin said. A Greenbelt resident of over 40 years, she has been coming to the senior lunches since the 1990s.

Rita Booe has been one of the two regular program servers for over 14 years; the other, Bhameney Fishbeck, has served lunches there for 10 years. Though numbers vary each day and each week, Booe estimated 14 to 16 seniors attend each lunch, with Wednesday normally being the busiest.

Sutfin indicated the benefit of the option for seniors to choose specific days they will come for the lunches, saying, “If they are coming in for a class one or two days a week, they can request for those days and not the whole week.”

The program is run through the recreation department’s office for senior services. Feedback from the seniors is taken into account at meetings of the advisory committee, which brings together representatives from nearby counties to discuss what the seniors do and do not like. A Meals on Wheels catering service through Prince George’s County that provides the meals is “very responsive to feedback we have,” according to Booe.

Volunteers for MOW make the meals at the organization’s center at the United Methodist Church on Rhode Island Avenue in College Park, and then more volunteers deliver the meals. In the Greenbelt area, about 25 to 27 clients receive these deliveries daily. While most clients are in Greenbelt and College Park, the organization also delivers to seniors’s homes in Hyattsville, Adelphi, Riverdale and Beltsville.

Volunteers check in on the clients when delivering meals. Seniors battling dementia get reminded to take their medications, since many prescriptions have to be taken with meals. The wellness check provides a safety net system for the family and friends of the seniors who cannot be with their loved ones all the time. MOW volunteers know to contact them if something is wrong or just to update the senior’s status.

“It also allows the opportunity to personalize the experience so they don’t have to go to the Community Center or elsewhere to get food,” said Kathy Selzer, the organization’s chair. For a client’s birthday, Selzer is happy to go off the preset menu to make the day special. Holidays like Christmas, Thanksgiving, New Year’s and Easter call for traditional meals and goodie bags.

About 20 volunteers work daily to make the food and deliver the meals. “It’s a great way for people to get out of the house and do something meaningful after they retire,” Selzer said about

MOW being run by volunteers. Selzer is a member of the church who started helping with MOW 17 years ago.

Both organizations run on the county school inclement weather schedule: meals are not delivered if the schools are closed. MOW clients are given emergency kits that will sustain them for two days in case deliveries will not be made for consecutive days. The nutrition program for seniors through the Community Center also occasionally offers shelf-safe meals that seniors can take home ahead of time in case of closures.

Having both the Community Center’s Senior Nutrition Program and College Park MOW allows seniors their choice in meal services, one to encourage activity outside the house and the other to accommodate if moving around is too difficult. The affordability of both options eases any financial burden meal expenses may have on these seniors. Others are comforted by the socialization in meeting up for lunch with friends from the community.

The menu for the Senior Nutrition Program is included in the News Review’s Community Events each week.

GAIL and Police Collaborate On Missing Persons Program

by Matthew Arbach

On January 2, Daniel DeHaven, a 65-year-old man from Beltsville with dementia, wandered off from the department store parking lot where he and his wife went to shop. His body was found a week later in Anne Arundel County. There is speculation that he may have been picked up and driven there. DeHaven was nonverbal and would have been unable to communicate with the driver. His death was most likely due to exposure to the severely cold temperatures.

This deeply unfortunate incident helped galvanize a joint initiative of the Greenbelt Police Department and Greenbelt Assistance in Living (GAIL), called the Critically Missing Person Project. Its mandate is to create a detailed database, including photos, of local residents who suffer from a variety of cognitive impairments, including autism, dementia and Alzheimer’s disease.

The impetus for the program is deeply personal. City spokeswoman Beverly Palau is a longtime friend of DeHaven’s wife and was highly involved in the search for him. While Greenbelt police were very helpful and informed, other local police departments were not as effective, and the available databases concerning the homeless and missing persons were largely outdated.

The many roadblocks, said Palau, came to the notice of her colleague Christal Batey, resource advocate for GAIL. Batey made contact with the Greenbelt police, and together they developed the program. Batey also created an information form, available in hard copy and online, that is now used to log in data for the program. The online form can be accessed at greenbeltnmd.gov/alerts with a click on Critically Missing Person Project.

A significant blockade, said Palau, was the limitation of the existing Silver Alert system, which deals with missing seniors. In addition, it refers only to seniors missing while driving, not those on foot, as in the case of DeHaven. However, during this year, the alert system was redesigned to include people on foot.

Six out of 10 individuals suffering from any type of dementia have a high likelihood of wandering. Since they also often have difficulty communicating clearly, creating a database of personal information will help authorities move quickly and effectively in their search. George Mathews, program developer and Greenbelt police information liaison said “speed is of the essence,” to prevent a dire conclusion. For more information on how to anticipate and deal with a cognitively-impaired loved one, refer to alz.org/care/alzheimers-dementia-wandering.asp.

According to Batey, the program is functional. Greenbelt residents are highly encouraged to supply information on loved ones and dependents who have any intellectual impairments. Photos are very important, as well as detailed personal information and pertinent past history, including a listing of favorite and familiar spots that one might gravitate to – places of comfort, as Mathews called them. Authorities can then immediately investigate these places.

When one of these individuals goes missing, a Greenbelt Alert goes out. Caretakers are immediately notified by phone, text and email of the ongoing details of the search to better coordinate with authorities. The Greenbelt communications and IT departments have been instrumental in improvements to the alert system as well as collecting data.

Batey emphasized that, while individuals may differ cognitively, they may in all other ways be physically fit and capable of quickly covering a significant distance. In the last six months, three or four people in Greenbelt have wandered off. Thankfully, all were found alive and well. Batey advised people to take current photos of high-risk loved ones to have a detailed image of their facial features and stature.

This new program aims to be an upgrade, said Mathews, that will make an investigation operate quicker and more efficiently than before. Palau sees it as another tool that provides current information for those at high risk. Batey hopes the program will make Greenbelt residents proactive versus reactive and help to empower first responders. When moments can make the difference between life and death, the speedier the effort, the better.

Caregiver Skills Training in May

Registration is now open for family and friend caregiver skills training to be offered in the Multipurpose Room of the Community Center on Monday, May 21. Two sessions will be offered, from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 1 to 4 p.m. Space is limited to 20 participants per session.

Dementia Friendly Prince George’s County-North County has partnered with United Medical Care to offer a free training program for family members who currently take care of elderly or disabled family members, neighbors or friends.

The training will be led by a registered nurse and will consist of training in proper techniques for bathing assistance, dressing/undressing assistance, ambulation/transferring assistance and checking vitals. The attendees will then apply their new skills under the supervision of the instructor.

Registration is required and closes Tuesday, May 8. To register, call Meryam Kahn at 240-542-2033.

Event to Honor Williamson, Kick Off Archive Project

by Sandra A. Lange

Mary Lou Williamson, as Greenbelt’s 1985 Outstanding Citizen, rides in the Labor Day Festival Parade. Her late husband Jim is by her side.

The unflappable former News Review Editor Mary Lou Williamson will be honored at a luncheon on Sunday, May 6 from 1 to 4 p.m. at the Greenbelt Marriott. After a 50-year career at the helm of the community’s nonprofit newspaper, Williamson has been succeeded as editor by Greenbelt resident Gary Childs. Besides honoring Williamson, the luncheon will be a springboard for the Greenbelt Archive Project, a nonprofit established to raise funds for the purchase of equipment and support staff to digitize old issues of the paper.

Williamson was a cub reporter in 1962 when she first began her sojourn on the News Review staff. For nearly 50 years she oversaw many changes, including moving from the basement office at 15 Parkway to the above-ground office in the Community Center. She has played a pivotal role in keeping the paper running smoothly week after week, as well as raising a family of three children and a grandniece. She guided the paper through transitions to new technologies such as going from hot lead type to computer-generated newsprint. After years of being told the News Review was a very gray paper with few photos, some of them fuzzy, she was a little taken aback by seeing color photos on nearly every page. “I don’t want the News Review to look like a comic book,” she commented wryly. Behind her calm demeanor is a person who has an unerring sense of what is right for the newspaper and for the community.

Though the News Review will host the May 6 luncheon and Silent Auction to honor Williamson, the event will be the vehicle by which the Greenbelt Archive Project seeks to raise funds to purchase the digitizing equipment to help preserve the paper – and the work of its editor emerita – for future generations. Tickets for the luncheon can be purchased online at <https://greenbeltarchive.org/> or at the News Review office in the Community Center on Tuesday afternoons between 2 and 4 p.m. (bring a credit card). Items available for purchase at the Silent Auction will be viewable online starting April 28 as well as at the luncheon.
